

The National Graduate Recruitment Conference 2007

The Grove Hotel, Hertfordshire Friday 14th September 2007

High Fliers Research is delighted to present the first national conference exclusively for graduate recruiters. With no suppliers, no agencies and no sponsors, this one-day event provides a unique forum for the UK's leading employers to discuss and debate the latest developments in graduate recruitment.

Timed to take place just before the start of the new university recruiting season, the conference programme includes in-depth analysis of graduate recruitment in 2006-2007, an exclusive preview of the graduate vacancies and starting salaries on offer from Britain's top employers in 2008, plus the chance to meet student job hunters from the 'Class of 2008'.

The conference features a choice of 'insight' sessions, offering first-hand accounts of how some of the country's best-known employers approach their graduate recruitment, and a special keynote address from Charles Macleod, Director of Recruitment at PricewaterhouseCoopers.

The venue for the conference is The Grove, a contemporary five-star hotel set in 300 acres of parkland, just 30 minutes from central London. Often described as London's country estate, The Grove provides a convenient and prestigious setting for The National Graduate Recruitment Conference 2007.

The conference programme begins at 9.30am and will finish by 5pm. The delegate rate for the day is £195+VAT which includes a three-course lunch in The Grove's Glasshouse Restaurant and all conference materials. To confirm your place at the event, please email carla.smith@highfliers.co.uk
